221. Nawabs of Surat – Silver ½ rupee in the name of Shah Alam II, RY 5(1/2/3?), 5.80 grams. The series with posthumous RYs of Shah Alam struck at Surat is intriguing. KM attributes these coins to 'French India' – however, the French had no interest in Surat after the takeover of the port city by the East India Company in 1800. Another suggestion is that these coins were struck unofficially by the Thakore of Bhaunagar, but good metal quality and a near-continuous run for several years make the suggestion of 'unofficial' copies implausible. It is more likely that they were struck by the Nawab from another mint in the city, and distinguished by the fact that they had a running RY as against British issues which had it frozen at 46. - 386. Wartime coins of occupied Belgium, 1943 (set of 5 coins). Zinc. The second world war started on 3rd September 1939, with Britain declaring war on Germany provoked by the German attack on Poland on 1st September. Germany swiftly attacked France and Flanders (an area now contained in modern-day Belgium, and the Netherlands) by using armor through hilly terrain in what they called a "blitzkrieg". But by 1943, the Germans were short on most metal and mineral resources for their munition industry. In fact, the copper, nickel, and stainless-steel coins were withdrawn and melted for munition, and new coins were minted in Zinc, the only metal they possessed in excess. The coinage of occupied countries was changed to Zinc. Presented here is a set of coins of occupied Belgium of 5c, 10c, 25c, 1 Franc, and 5 Francs. Zinc is not a coinage metal and tends to oxidize on exposure.

- 402. Wartime coins of occupied France (Set of 6). Aluminum. With its motto of 'Liberty, Equality and Fraternity', the Republic of France is synonymous with modern democracy. The Goddess of Liberty is a leitmotif of France. But the second world war changed all that. The history of the war is reflected in the coinage of France. Presented here is a set of 6 coins of 1 Franc denomination sorted year-wise from 1941-45. The 1941 coin minted before the fall of France has all the hallmarks of the Republic of France: the motto on the obverse and the effigy of the Goddess of Liberty on the reverse. After the fall of France, the coins minted in 1942-44 the obverse sports the motto 'Travail, Famille, Patrie' (meaning Work, Family, and Fatherland-the Nazi concept of society). On the reverse, the effigy of the Goddess of Liberty is replaced by an industrial motif underlining the importance of industrial production for the war effort. France is reduced to 'Etat' France, meaning a subdivision of the main (Nazi) German administration, somewhat akin to a State within a country. However, soon after the liberation of France in 1944, the coinage goes back to the motif of the Republic. There are thus two coins of 1944- pre and post-liberation. The coin of 1945 continues the trend of free France.

- 403. Coins of Nazi Germany (set of 7). Copper 2. Al-bronze 1. Aluminum 1. Zinc 3. After the rise of the Nazi party with Hitler at the helm in 1933, the coinage of Germany, especially the coinage of low denominations dramatically changed with the depiction of the Imperial Eagle holding within its claws the Swastika symbol of the Nazi party. This symbolized the unification of the country with the political party. Presented here is a set of 7 coins depicting this change. As the war entered its crucial years, an extreme shortage of metal and mineral resources led to the withdrawal of all copper, nickel, and stainless-steel coins from circulation and the release of coins minted in Zinc. Zinc is not a coinage metal and the coins, therefore, get oxidized.
